The Search For Values

RUSSELL COLEBURT

Camus, Beckett, Osborne and many others illustrate in their work the sense of disintegration which follows from a failure to find central "values." The author of this book examines the form of the present day search in art and literature. 12/6 net

Logic For Lunatics

JOHN COULSON, Illustrations by BROTHER CHOLERIC

The element of lunacy in our thinking is apparent to most of us in our reflective moments. The world of Mr. Coulson is like that of Mr. Pinfold. The illustrations are lunatic rather than logical. 18/- net

The Mirror of Philosophers

MARTIN VERSFELD

Philosophy is often considered a recondite subject. This is possibly because it moves so very slowly, but its movement is always along fundamental ideas. Mr. Versfeld has written a book in which he presents a philosopher's manifesto. He says that what a philosopher says must square both with itself and the fact that he is a man. 18/- net

SHEED & WARD

DUNS SCOTUS Philosophical Writings

edited by ALLAN WOLTER O.F.M. This selection of the writings of Duns Scotus is taken from his Ordinatio, better known as his Oxford Commentary on the Sentences of Peter Lombard, and is here printed in Latin with an English translation. It presents his views on the chief aspects of the questions concerned with God and the human soul. Two questions deal with the existence and unicity of God, two questions with the human soul, one concerning its spirituality and its immortality, the other its ability to attain certain knowledge. One half-tone illustration. 30s
