QUARTERLY CHRONICLE AND DOCUMENTATION

Scientism in Chinese Thought, 1900-1950

by D. W. Y. Kwok

An account of the subtle and far-reaching intellectual conversion to scientism that coloured the transformation of China in the twentieth century. The part that this intellectual phenomenon played in revolutionary China carries serious implications for the direction of the new culture envisaged by its contemporary champions. 50s net

The Chinese in Philippine Life, 1850-1898

by Edgar Wickberg

In a book particularly relevant to current events in South-East Asia, Edgar Wickberg details the typical development of an overseas Chinese community. How do the Chinese gain their tremendous economic power? How do they maintain their resistance to cultural and social assimilation? 56s net

Dictionary of Spoken Chinese

Compiled by the Staff of The Institute of Far Eastern Languages, Yale University. A new lexical and grammatical guide to the modern Chinese spoken language, stressing identification of the grammatical and syntactic functions of the words listed by both symbols and sentence-length examples. With some 10,000 entries in both romanization and Chinese characters, this is the authorized revision and expansion of the small War Department dictionary of 1945. 1120 pages 105s net
