

*Department of Public Health, Epidemiology and Biostatistics
University of Birmingham
Edgbaston
Birmingham B15 2TT, UK*

Can a health professional represent patient views: HTA response

doi:10.1017/S0266462311000420

To the Editor:

As a health technology assessment body committed to active patient and public involvement, we at the Scottish Medicines Consortium (SMC) have considered the question above and the views expressed by Dr. Claire Packer and conclude that the answer is “Yes.” As Dr. Packer notes, no patient representative can ever be purely a patient with a specific condition as everyone brings other life experiences, including but not limited to their employment, to their understanding, and perception of their condition. A background in health care will provide different experiences from other backgrounds, but these experiences bring added breadth to the patient perception and, thus, enhance any health technology assessment or other decision making in the health arena.

Clearly a patient with a background in finance, education, or manufacturing industry would bring different experiences, but these are no more (or less) valid or valuable than the experiences of a healthcare professional. Importantly, patient representatives in healthcare decision making have a role to represent as wide a range of patients as possible and not simply themselves. This is a difficult challenge and one which no organization has fully resolved, but there is no reason to expect that a patient with a healthcare background would be any less able to fulfill this role than any other patient. Involvement of several patients from different backgrounds is ideal, and where established Patient Interest Groups already exist, their involvement (subject to appropriate declarations of interest) can be very helpful and avoid over-reliance on individual patients. No individual sub-group of patients should be systematically excluded from the process.

As Dr. Packer notes, healthcare professionals experience the same range of emotional and psychological responses to the development of both acute and chronic illness as other patients, and may struggle to find the support and help that they need. To suggest that their experiences have no relevance or value in healthcare decision making is entirely inappropriate.

Ken Paterson

Email: ken.paterson@dsl.pipex.com

Chair, Scottish Medicines Consortium

Delta House

50 West Nile Street

Glasgow G1 2NP

Scotland

Can a health professional represent patient view: Patient organization response

doi:10.1017/S0266462311000432

To the Editor:

A healthcare professional expressed anger and dismay in response to a comment reportedly made by a patient group representative that “health professionals (even those who are also patients) were not considered as representatives for patient groups in decision-making fora.” I have heard this sentiment before and always believed it begs the question, “What qualifies one to be a patient representative, and are there any disqualifiers?”

Obviously, not just anyone who has a health condition could appropriately represent the “patient perspective” in a decision-making context. He/she would need to know the views of the patients affected by the decision and also be able to represent these views in a multi-stakeholder forum. He/she potentially could be a board member or staff of a patient organization.

Presumably, in a multi-stakeholder forum, the patient representative would advocate for the best interests of the “recipients” of healthcare in the same way as others advocate for the interests of the “regulator,” “public payer,” the “healthcare institution,” and the “healthcare provider.” Could the reviewer, the bureaucrat, the administrator, or the health professional also be a patient? Based on the statistics, at least half of them are. However, they participate in their professional roles, not their personal roles.

The representative for the patient presumably also has other roles in life, but he/she will be speaking in the role of patient. He/she could be a teacher, a chef, a housekeeper, bank executive, lawyer, politician, and, yes, even a dentist, pharmacist, nurse, or doctor.

There are obviously many advantages to having patient representatives at the decision table who can easily understand the perspectives of the other stakeholders and who are respected by the others. There are, however, two key challenges for the patient representative who also has (or had) one of the other stakeholder roles. Can he/she manage the potential conflicts of interest and strongly advocate as a patient? More importantly, can he/she maintain the trust of the patients represented? In reality, these are personal qualifications for any patient advocate, and not all patients have them. The health professional chosen to represent patients just has to work a little bit harder to demonstrate them.

Durhane Wong-Rieger, PhD

Email: durhane@sympatico.ca

Chair-Elect, International Alliance of Patients’

Organizations

703 The Chandery