

CHRONIQUE-ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY. Prize for an essay in the Philosophy of Mathematics.

A donor who wishes to remain anonymous has given the Society £150 to be awarded as prize money in an open competition for essays upon a topic or topics in the Philosophy of Mathematics. An essay which is to be considered for an award may be either a philosophical investigation of some fundamental concept of mathematics, or an historical study of some notable contribution to the philosophy of mathematics, or a critical examination of the achievements and limitations of current methods of mathematical logic in dealing with some specific problem of the philosophy of mathematics. It should be typed in English, French or German (2 copies); and it should not be a work that has already been published, or is at the time being considered for publication. It may be a dissertation which the candidate has previously submitted in a Ph. D. or similar examination. The Judges have discretion to divide the prize money as they think fit provided that they shall not divide it among more than three candidates and shall not give an award to any candidate unless in their opinion his work deserves such encouragement.

Entries should reach The Secretary, The Aristotelian Society, 30 Frith Street, London, W.1. by not later than 30th June, 1964.

A. A. KASSMAN

(Hon. Secretary & Editor)

A new scholarly journal in philosophy, the AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL QUARTERLY, will commence publication in January, 1964. Professor Nicholas Rescher, editor of this journal, will be assisted by an editorial board consisting of eminent philosophers from many countries. The policy is to print no book reviews or discussion notes, to make possible the publication of longer and more substantial articles than usually find a place in philosophical journals. Articles for publication, and all other communications and enquiries should be addressed to: The Editor, American Philosophical Quarterly, Department of Philosophy, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh 13, Pennsylvania.
