

IN MEMORIAM

MORRIS BRYAN LAMBIE, who was professor of government and director of the bureau of municipal administration at Harvard University, 1935-54, and professor of political science, director of the Municipal Reference Bureau, and executive secretary of the League of Minnesota Municipalities, at the University of Minnesota, 1921-35, died on March 23, 1962, in Jordan, where he was teaching public administration at Bir Zeit University under a combined Department of State and Ford Foundation grant. After his retirement from the faculty of Harvard University, Professor Lambie had taught at Tufts University, Boston University, and Boston College. Among many public activities, he served as chairman of the advisory council of the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security and consultant to the Greater Boston Economic Study Commission.

HAROLD ZINK, professor of political science at Ohio State University, died June 19, 1962, of a heart failure after several weeks of trying illness.

Prior to joining the faculty at Ohio State, Professor Zink was chairman of the department at DePauw University. He lectured at European and Asian universities and frequently contributed to the academic journals. He was the author of more than a dozen books, including American Military Government (1947), and The United States and Germany (1957).

During World War II, he was assigned to SHAEF, first in London and then in France, as a staff officer. He was American editor of the Handbook for Military Government in Germany and a consultant to the Allied Control Council on the reorganization of the German Government.

Professor Zink made many contributions to the literature of political science; and his book on city bosses is widely regarded as a classic in its field. During his later years he devoted himself to the study of comparative government, especially of British institutions in their domestic and overseas settings. He brought to that subject a keen concern for governmental changes and evolution: a concern that made him a "field researcher" and constant world traveller, bringing to his classroom and his books the most up-to-date knowledge of the world's governments. He also directed a research project on local government in Sweden, Italy and India, sponsored by UNESCO, from 1954 through 1957.

He was active in the formation of the Midwest Conference, and a regular participant in the programs of the American and the International Political Science Associations.—LAWRENCE J. R. HERSON
