Volume 22 (2000) of the Nordic Journal of Linguistics will be a special issue entitled “Cognitive Approaches to Language”. It will be edited by Urpo Nikanne. In present-day linguistics, there are several theoretical schools of thought each with the goal to establish a theory of language as part of human cognition. The purpose of the special issue is to help communication between these schools of thought by comparing the different approaches. Articles in which the relationship between cognitively oriented and other approaches to language are discussed (e.g. socially oriented) would also be interesting for this issue. Readers are therefore invited to send their contributions to Urpo Nikanne by 31 January 2000. (Address: Urpo Nikanne, University of Oslo, Department of East European and Oriental Studies, P.O. Box 1030 Blindern, N-0315 Oslo, Norway; email: urpon@hedda.uio.no.)
