On the Cover: Canine Kayle with a sit alert to indicate that the rock mound contains a human burial. In the 1860s a military expedition was passing through central Oregon when several members died. The decision was made to bury the deceased on top of a nearby mountain. Recent research by a local historical group located two rock mounds consistent in size with a human burial on top of a mountain near the road used by the military. They requested that the Institute for Canine Forensics investigate to determine if these were burial mounds. Two certified dogs indicated that both rock mounds contain human burials. We cannot be sure these burials are from the military expedition, but they are consistent with the historical record. Photograph by Adela Morris.

Advances in Archaeological Practice is a quarterly, full-color, digital journal devoted to sharing creative solutions to challenges in the practice of archaeology globally. The journal is available as a benefit of membership in the SAA or by subscription.
