

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The autobiography of Edward Jarvis is published by permission of the Houghton Library, Harvard University, and I am grateful to the Concord Free Public Library for permission to quote from Edward Jarvis's manuscripts, including the diaries, held in their collections; and for permission to reproduce the illustrations.

The publication of The autobiography of Edward Jarvis gives me the opportunity to remember with gratitude a number of people. I would like to thank David Landes, a great historian whose gifts of intelligence and humanity are not easy to describe. I owe Marcia E. Moss, Curator, Concord Free Public Library, a special debt for her kindness and helpfulness which made my research possible; to W. F. Bynum, Roy Porter, and Caroline Tonson-Rye of the Wellcome Institute for the History of Medicine, London, a special thank you for the intelligent and kind welcome they gave to Edward Jarvis's manuscript. My thanks also to Michael J. Carella and Howard Kushner at the San Diego State University History Department, and to Barbara Gutmann Rosencrantz, Harvard Sciences Center, for a scholarly personality which makes it tempting to cross the Atlantic just to see her. I owe a great deal for the friendship, intelligence and sensitivity which they have generously given me to Carol and Howard Kushner, Kathleen Carella, Margaret and David Moody, Art Springer, Iris and Franklin Mendels (because Franklin never died in the memory of his friends), Johanne Ferraro, Stewart Hughes, Laurent Baron, Monique and Steven Kaplan, Lynda and Geoffrey Symcox, Robert C. Ritchie, David V. DuFault, Maurice Friedman, and William Issel: in my visits to the Universities of Harvard, Maryland, Cornell, Los Angeles, San Diego and San Francisco, they taught me about the best of American culture; and I would also thank Elaine and Richard Steele, Pietro Corsi, Albert O'Brien, Francis N. Stites, Jessie and Philip Flemion, Charles D. Hamilton, Edith Benkov, Ellen and Kurt Queller, Ross Dunn, Elsa Feher, Brendan E. Maher, Joel Kovel. I am grateful to my friends, whom it is always invidious to cite in any order of priority and can only be thanked in alphabetical order: Fiora Bassanese in Boston, Maria De Blasi Wilhelm, Dante Della Terza, Ester Fano, Florence Hammond, Amelia Rechel-Cohn, Frederick Spotts, and my dearest Cecilia and Roberto Mattii in Cambridge, John Davis, Robert Oresko, Richard Palmer, J. Stuart Woolf in London. Nor can I forget Filomena Nitti-Bovet and Daniel Bovet, their great amiability in Rome and their tremendous knowledge of drug induced habits; Christian Neel-Robert in Geneva; Jean Starobinski and Eric Hobsbawm, whose understanding is unforgettable, Maurice Aymard and the continual intellectual fruitfulness of the Maison des Sciences de l'Homme in Paris; Gustave and Marie Thérèse Bouquet-Boyer, Maria Rosa De Madariaga, Roger and Annie Rey Golzeiguer, Renée and Jean Nicolas, Aldo and Elodie Vitale, Catherine Levy-Halevy, and Pierre Vilar to whom more than one generation of European and Latin American historians owe a profound debt. At Turin, my University when Norberto Bobbio was teaching, and Umberto Dianzani dean, Dora Marucco and Carla Gobetti, Gian Mario Bravo, Menachem Emanuele Artom and Elena De Benedetti Artom, Filippo Barbano, Claudia, Vittoria and Ettore Passerin D'Entreves, Silvana Momigliano-Mustari, Giorgio Vaccarino, Piero and Matilde Bairati, Teresa Succo-Angeletti, Grazia Barone and Alessandra Sereno, Sandra and Sergio Levi. At the University of Salerno I must thank my wonderful friends and colleagues who have been so understanding of many problems.

The Harvard Economics Department and the Center for European Studies, enlivened also by the unforgettable “Friday meals” with Abby Collins, provided me with a pleasant working environment; the Fulbright Committee and the San Diego State University History Department offered me the best possible conditions in which to finish and publish. A particular thanks for their kind attentions to Dale Ballou May, Laura Gooding, Paula Tschettor and to the Dean and staff at SDSU History Department; to Rebecca Ramsey, Gloria Gerring, and Betty Cogswell at the Harvard Economics Department; to Rachael Litonjua-Witt and James Edwards at SDSU Media Technology Services. Marie Rose Marybank and her colleagues on the Boston Fulbright Committee, Anne M. Bodenheimer on the Los Angeles Fulbright Committee, Mindy Reiser, Virginia Russell, Ann Farrar and her colleagues at the CIES at Washington smoothed my stay in the USA. Betty McNally, Carol Fenn and the inhabitants of Harvard Dunster House gave me the friendly calm which research requires.

Special thanks are due to the archivists and librarians who helped me at the Wellcome Institute for the History of Medicine, London, Anna Fabbri Gherardelli and Lia Invernizzi at the Biblioteca Nazionale, Florence, the Harvard Houghton Library and its director Rodney G. Dennis, the Widener Library, the Harvard Archives, the Massachusetts Historical Society, the Library of the Boston Athaeneum, the Boston Countway Library of the History of Medicine, its director Richard J. Wolfe and its staff (in particular Mary Van Winkle, Dela Zitkus, and Corinne Blakeslee), the UCLA Biomedical Library (Florence Nightingale collection), and Sherill McConnell at the Kornhauser Health Sciences Library at Louisville, Kentucky.

I dedicate these pages to my parents, whose love, hope and truth I will never forget, and to Giorgio Montalenti: in their memory.
