BELTONE INSTITUTE FOR HEARING RESEARCH

THE MORPHOLOGY AND FUNCTION OF AUDITORY INPUT CONTROL, a monograph by G. Filogamo, L. Candiollo, and G. Rossi of Turin, Italy, is soon to be issued by the Beltone Institute for Hearing Research as Number 20 in the series of Translations in the field of hearing research.

The monograph (154 pages, 69 figures) appeared originally in Italian in 1965. It represents the first serious attempt to give a summarizing account of the complex control mechanisms that govern the reception of auditory signals by the central nervous system from its sensory receptors within the ear.

The existence of such controls was not known some 25 years ago, at which time the American anatomist G. Rasmussen first described nerve tracts descending from the brain toward the ear, which have since been recognized as pathways of such controls. They appear to function in a manner similar to that of feedback loops in modern electronic equipment, radio receivers, amplifiers, and the like.

Anyone wanting a copy free of charge should write to: Executive Secretary, Beltone Institute for Hearing Research, 108 North State Street-Room 1200, Chicago, Illinois 60602.
